NOTES: The author tells of his part in the remarkable battle of Nunshigum where Lee/Grant tanks were manoeuvred up a mountain ridge to attack well dug-in Japanese. Written in diary form. Provides an insight into tank combat tactics in the jungle of Burma and how oppressive and messy it was, how the enemy was only part of the battle, and the relationships inside a tank. Amongst the appendices the author has provided a far more expansive glossary than the norm, explaining many of the unusual terms used in the Far East.

Section IX

Royal Armoured Corps: TA – Royal Tank Regiment

The British Army had started to expand its forces in the years prior to the Second World War. Included in this expansion was the armoured branch and in November 1938, six Territorial Army (TA) infantry battalions were converted to tanks to form new Royal Tank Regiment battalions.* These were 40th to 45th Bn, RTR and existing regular RTR battalions provided cadres.

In May 1939 as part of the overall doubling of TA battalions, these six RTR units raised cadres themselves to form a further six tank battalions, being 46th to 51st Bn, RTR.

* Refer to the introduction of 'Section V' and the note on the RTR's regimental nomenclature.

The table below provides a summary of each TA RTR battalion listing its antecedent infantry battalion and RTR cadre.

RTR Bn	Converted Inf. Bn	Conversion date	RTR Cadre
40RTR	7 th Bn The King's (Liverpool Regiment)	1 November 1938	1RTR
41RTR	10 th Bn The Manchester Regiment	1 November 1938	3RTR

NOTES: The author's recollections start with his journey out to the ME in May 1942, whilst serving with 41RTR. They comprise his letters home plus occasional narrative in explanation or more detailed comment on men he served alongside. He details the minutiae of army life, dominated by food, the notes and letters being written at the time or very soon after the event. On the breakup of 41RTR he was transferred to 4CLY in December 1942, remaining with them until the war's end (as 3/4CLY) In February 1945 his tank was hit and he suffered burns; the letters end at this point.
